

WISE OWL MUSIC

THE VOYAGE OF MAECDÚN by Andrew Shiels

The Voyage of Maeldun was a prize winning work at the 1983 Stroud Festival International Composers' Competition. The first performance was given by Robert Brightmore at the Sibly Hall, Stroud, on 5th October, 1983.

Copyright 1984 WISE OWL MUSIC all rights reserved.

Cover Artwork: Greta Bull Cover Design: Elaine Burberry

We hope that you enjoy the music in this book so much that you will want to tell your friends about it. Please remember that photo-copying copyright musical material is illegal, and prohibited by the Copyright Act.

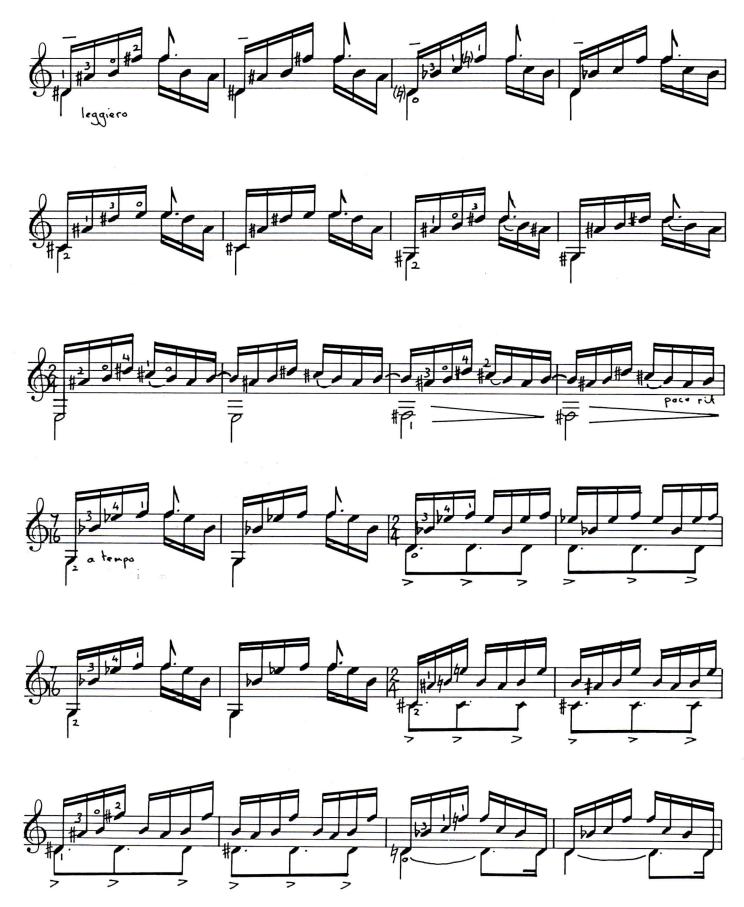

SUPPORT COMPOSERS, DON'T PHOTOCOPY

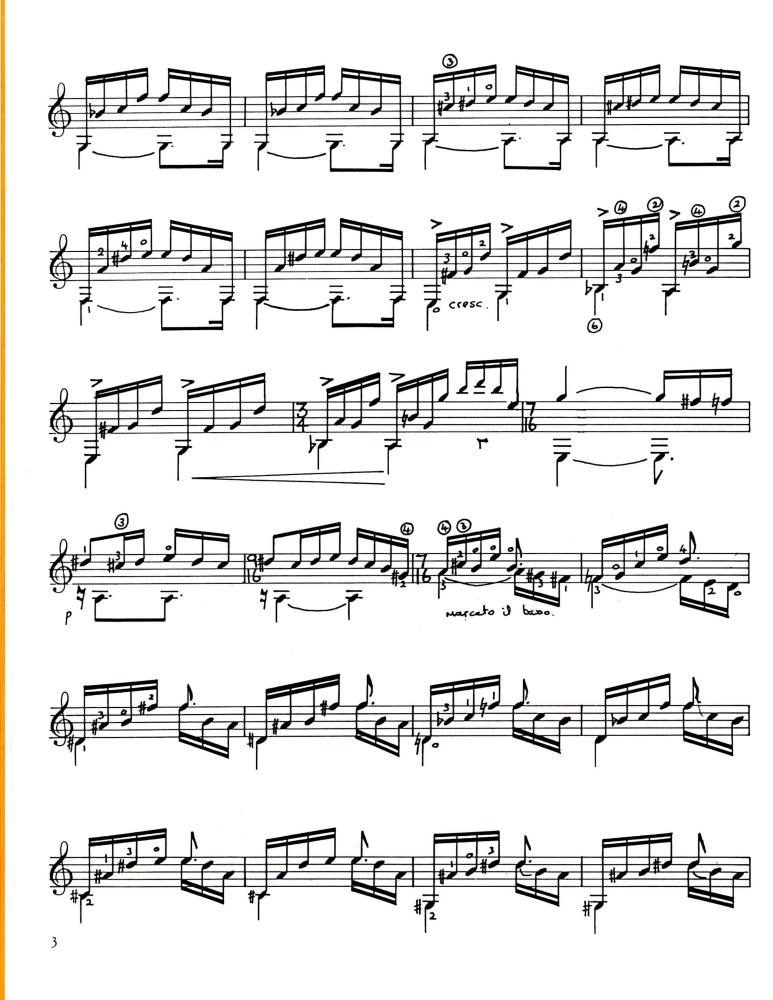

Voyages' to be found in ancient Irish literature, probably dating from the ninth century.

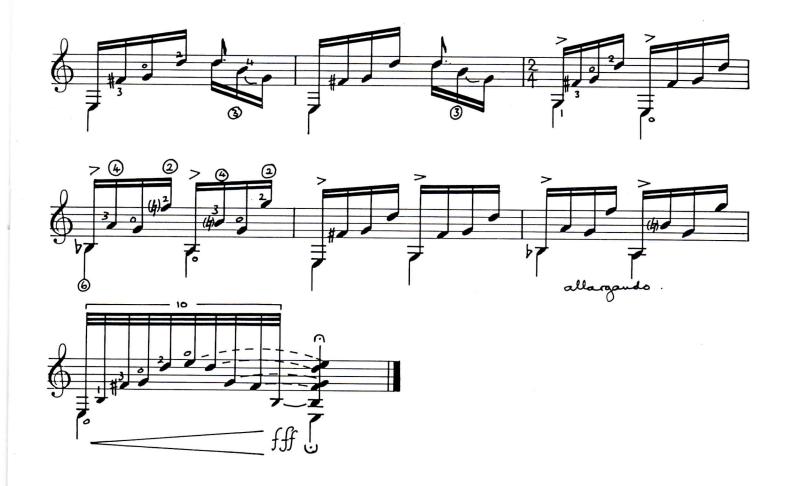

Maeldun and his crew sail their boat from island to island in search of the man who killed Ailill, Maeldun's Father.

The Island Of The Slayers

First, after rowing for a day and half the night, they find the \underline{ISLAND} \underline{OF} \underline{THE} $\underline{SLAYERS}$. Standing off from the island they hear the noise of two men quarreling, one of them boasting of his bravery in killing Ailill. Just as Maeldun and his crew are about to land, a strong wind blows them far out to sea and leaves them hopelessly lost.

They approach the \underline{ISLAND} \underline{OF} \underline{THE} \underline{BLACK} $\underline{MOURNERS}$ which is populated by black people continually weeping and lamenting. Here two of the crew are lost as when they land on the island, they too turn black and fall to weeping like the rest.

The Island Of The Black Mourners

Maeldun and his crew flee and sometime after, find themselves at the ISLAND OF THE LITTLE CAT where mysteriously laid before them is a great feast. There are no people to be seen, but a small cat plays on four stone pillars and all around one can see great riches. The eat, drink and sleep. Next day, having stored what food was left, they make to leave the island but as they do so, one of the crew, against strict orders, steals a necklace - suddenly, the cat leaps through him like a fiery arrow and he falls a heap of ashes to the floor.

The Island Of The Little Cat

Maeldun consoles the cat, who then returns to his play, they leave and next arrive at the ISLAND OF THE MONK OF TROY. Here lives an aged Monk, once arrogant but now reformed. At noon miraculously, some nourishment is brought for everyone by the otters from the sea; after all have eaten their fill the monk speaks to them saying "Ye will reach your country and the man that slew thy father, O Maeldun, ye will find him in a fortress before you. Slay him not, but forgive him, because God hath saved you from manifold great perils, and ye too are men deserving of death."

The Island Of The Monk Of Troy

They bid the Monk farewell and go on their way. At night-fall land is sighted and soon they land on a small island with a fortress, wherein dwells Ailill's murderer. As the Monk had commanded, they enter in peace and great welcome is made for them.

